

VALUES THAT GUIDE OUR LEARNING COMMUNITY

Education goes beyond acquiring academic knowledge and developing professional or technical skills. It also involves developing the attitudes, habits, and values that shape our character and guide the way we live, study, work, and interact with others.

These values are principles that guide our conduct. They are not limited to the classroom or to professional life; they are meant to be practiced every day - at school, at work, at home, and in our community.

RESPONSIBILITY

Do what is yours to do.

Take ownership of your duties, decisions, and results. Complete the work that corresponds to you and accept the consequences of your choices.

COMMITMENT

Honor your word.

What you say, promise, or agree to has value. Follow through on your word and fulfill the obligations you have accepted, whether spoken or written.

PUNCTUALITY

Be on time.

Respect your own time and the time of others. Punctuality demonstrates discipline, organization, consideration, and respect.

RESPECT

Treat others with consideration and dignity.

Practice courtesy, appreciation, tolerance, and consideration toward others. Respect different ideas, perspectives, abilities, and ways of thinking. Respect is essential for learning, living, and working together.

HONESTY

Be truthful. Do your own work.

Speak and act truthfully. Academic work should represent your own effort, knowledge, and learning. Asking for help is part of learning; presenting someone else's work as your own is not.

ORDER & CLEANLINESS

A place for everything, and everything in its place. Keep your surroundings clean and pleasant.

Make order and cleanliness part of your daily habits, wherever you are. Keep your classroom, home, room, desk, and work areas organized and clean. A well-kept environment creates a pleasant atmosphere and helps us work, think, and live better.

Apply the same principle to your digital environment: organize files and folders properly, use meaningful names, remove unnecessary files, and maintain a clear workspace. Apply it also to the quality and presentation of academic work. Printed work should be clean, legible, well organized, and in good physical condition; digital work should be equally clear, professional, orderly, and thoughtfully presented.

Taking care of our surroundings, our belongings, and the work we produce demonstrates discipline, attention to detail, and consideration for ourselves and for others.

Responsibility builds trust. Commitment gives value to our word.

Punctuality shows respect. Respect allows us to live and work together.

Honesty gives integrity to our achievements.

Order and cleanliness improve the environment in which we live, learn, and work.

A high-value professional is not defined only by what they know, but also by how they act: someone who is responsible, honors commitments, respects time and people, acts with honesty, and takes pride in the order, cleanliness, and quality of everything they do every day.

A FINAL THOUGHT

Education is reflected not only in what we know, but also in how we act, how we treat others, and how we live our everyday lives.

What we learn prepares us for a profession.

How we conduct ourselves defines the kind of person and professional we become.
